Statement by CSPC President and CEO Glenn Nye

CSPC mourns the loss of Eli Broad, 1933-2021

Eli Broad, a longtime Trustee at CSPC, led a life of leadership and service and contributed greatly to the lives of countless Americans through his dedication to education, science and the arts. His life was a true American story of success through hard work and creative innovation. Eli transformed and build two iconic American companies, while reshaping the insurance and housing industries. Together with his wife and partner Edythe, Eli leveraged his financial success into a philanthropic force that set an example to the country of civic leadership and dedication to the success of his communities.

Eli's generous support to CSPC has enabled the development of future American leaders, as well as the promotion of effective governance for our country. His unique approach to solving problems, captured in his book "The Art of Being Unreasonable, Lessons in Unconventional Thinking," highlight his lasting legacy of impact on the business world but also how we approach our responsibilities as citizens. His mark on this world will continue for generations to come.

Our thoughts and prayers are with his family.
